Le focene tendono ad essere più piccole ma più robuste dei delfini. Hanno teste piccole ed arrotondate e mascelle smussate al posto del rostro. Mentre i delfini hanno un "melone" rotondo e bulboso, le focene ne sono prive. I loro denti sono a forma di spatola; invece i delfini hanno denti conici. Inoltre, una pinna dorsale di focena è generalmente triangolare, piuttosto che ricurva come quella di molti delfini e delle grandi balene. Alcune specie hanno piccole escrescenze, note come tubercoli, sul margine anteriore della pinna dorsale. La funzione di queste escrescenze è sconosciuta.

Questi animali sono i cetacei più piccoli, raggiungendo lunghezze massime di 2,5 metri; la specie più piccola è la focena del Golfo di California, che non misura
